Our freedom from the trammels of history and tradition; our ability to stand on neutral ground and to choose the best in thought, let it come from what source it will; the alertness, the vigor, the independence, and the faithfulness of the American scholarship which one sees busied in the university, --all give one the feeling that time is the only element lacking to place the American scholar in the very front rank of the world s scholarship. In conclusion, it may be added that it is no slight gain to have been in touch, even for a limited time, with the personality of leaders of thought in philosophy. The most popular of the professors of philosophy, I believe, unquestionably, to be Professor Paulsen, -- a tall, rather...
